Electoral registration: publication of monthly notices prior to publication of the revised register

We have recently received a number of queries relating to the publication of monthly notices of alteration in October and November in advance of the planned publication of the revised register.

As you know, EROs are required to publish the revised register by 1 December 2019, unless there has been an election during the canvass, in which case publication of the register may be postponed until up to 1 February 2020. For these purposes, an election is deemed to be during the canvass if polling day falls between 1 July and 1 December (inclusive).

Monthly notices of alteration to the register must be published on the first working day of each month, apart from the month you are publishing the revised register and in the two months prior. However, while you are not required to publish monthly notices of alteration in the two months prior to the publication of your revised register, you may decide to publish monthly updates during this period.

Publishing monthly notices of alteration in advance of the publication of the revised register are likely to have a positive impact on the management of any poll that occurs during this period.

For example, it would help to ensure that your electoral register is as up to date as possible and would subsequently maximise the number of electors who are included in your first data cut for the production of poll cards.

If you do decide to publish an update in October or November, you should ensure that those who are entitled to receive the register are aware of your plans and are able to receive the updates.

Managing the impact of an election during the canvass

More generally, we have received a number of queries relating to proactive steps that administrators can take now to ensure they are best prepared for any unscheduled polls during the canvass.

The impact of a poll during the canvass would depend on its timing, and would also vary locally depending on where you are in the canvass process. There are, however, a number of general actions that can be undertaken now to help preparedness for any unscheduled poll during the canvass:

- Prioritise the review of all returned HEFs to ascertain whether there are potential new electors that should be issued with an ITR to ensure they have the opportunity to apply to register in advance of any poll. To help avoid potential confusion, you should ensure that the messaging you provide with ITRs makes clear the need to complete an application as part of the registration process, even although they may have recently responded to the HEF
- Wherever possible, you should proactively contact overseas electors to ensure they are aware of the risks of them being able to receive, complete and return postal votes in time for them to be counted and of the option to apply to vote by proxy, to enable them to make an informed decision on what voting method is best for them. Information to help overseas electors understand their options can be found on our website

In the event of an unscheduled poll during the canvass, or in early December, we will provide further guidance to help support you with the decisions you will need to take in relation to the management of the rest of the canvass and the publication of the revised register following the canvass.

Electoral Commission response to feedback on our Codes of Practice for election spending for political parties and candidates

As set out in Bulletin 211, between September and December 2018 we carried out a consultation on two Codes of Practice for election spending: spending by candidates and spending by parties. We wanted views from a wide range of stakeholders, recognising how important it is that people who will use the Codes support them.

On 22 July we published our response to the feedback we received during the consultation. In response to the feedback we made changes to the draft Codes and these are set out in detail in our response.

We have now submitted the Codes to the Minister for Cabinet Office to approve and lay before the UK Parliament.

We will manage your personal information and contact details in line with the General Data Protection Regulation and UK data protection legislation as outlined in our privacy notice (<https://www.electoralcommission.org.uk/privacy-notice>)

Background

Elections legislation enables us to prepare Codes of Practice about election spending for political parties and candidates. A Code of Practice is a statutory document that provides detailed practical guidance on how to comply with legal obligations. When in force, parties and candidates will need to take the Codes into account when they campaign and report spending after an election.

If enacted the Codes will improve transparency, fairness and consistency in reporting for candidates, agents and parties. They will make it clearer to voters and observers what was spent on different activities during campaigns.

Overall people were supportive of our aim for the Codes, to make it clearer what should be reported as party and candidate spending.

The Codes relate to elections that the UK Parliament is responsible for, i.e. UK Parliamentary, Northern Ireland Assembly and English local government elections. In some circumstances they will apply to other elections as well – more information can be found in our response.

We are currently working on separate codes for Scottish Parliamentary and National Assembly for Wales elections.
